TENGERU COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT JOURNAL ◆ TCDJ

Editorial Board

EDITION
2026

The Tengeru Community Development Journal (TCDJ) is guided by an Editorial Board of distinguished scholars, researchers, and professionals from academic, research, and development institutions in Tanzania and internationally. The Board provides scholarly guidance and editorial oversight to uphold the journal's academic quality, integrity, credibility and relevance. Its members help the journal maintain rigorous peer review standards, promote ethical publishing practices, safeguard editorial independence, and strengthen the dissemination of high-quality research in community development and related disciplines. The Board's diverse expertise and institutional representation enhance the journal's multidisciplinary orientation, international visibility, and commitment to scholarly excellence. The following scholars and professionals constitute the Editorial Board of TCDJ for 2026:

02 Editorial Governance and Responsibilities

The Tengeru Community Development Journal (TCDJ) maintains an Editorial Board to provide scholarly oversight, uphold editorial standards and support the publication of credible, relevant and ethically conducted research in community development and related disciplines.

Editorial Structure

The journal's editorial structure includes an Editor-in-Chief, a Managing Editor and Editorial Board Members, subject to formal institutional appointment.

Responsibilities of the Editorial Board

- Provide strategic academic guidance on the journal's scope, quality and development.
- Advise on editorial policies, manuscript standards, peer-review quality and publication ethics.

- Support the identification of qualified, independent reviewers and subject specialists when requested.
- Promote fair, timely and rigorous assessment of manuscripts on scholarly merit, originality, methodological soundness and relevance.
- Advise on allegations of plagiarism, duplicate publication, authorship disputes and other research-integrity concerns, while observing due process.
- Support the journal's visibility, scholarly networks and continuous improvement without guaranteeing acceptance of submissions.

Editorial Independence and Decision-Making

Editorial decisions shall be based on scholarly merit and the journal's published policies, free from improper institutional, commercial, personal or political influence. The Editor-in-Chief, or an appropriately delegated editor, retains responsibility for final manuscript decisions after consideration of peer-review reports and applicable ethical requirements. Editorial Board membership does not confer automatic authority to accept manuscripts.

Confidentiality, Conflicts of Interest and Research Integrity

Editors and board members must protect confidential manuscripts, reviewer identities and editorial correspondence in accordance with the TCDJ review model. They must declare actual or potential conflicts of interest and recuse themselves from affected editorial decisions. The TCDJ will assess allegations of misconduct confidentially, fairly, and consistently, giving affected parties an opportunity to respond. Manuscripts and review materials must not be uploaded to unapproved artificial intelligence services.

Board Membership, Transparency and Review

The Editorial Board memberships are official appointments, with defined responsibilities and terms of service. Membership reflects relevant disciplinary expertise, institutional diversity and appropriate geographical representation. The journal shall periodically review board composition, participation and contact information, and publish accurate, current affiliations and editorial roles on TCDJ website.
